"Following a successful trial with Reader 2™ and Exam Reader 2™, ULaw will be offering these to students who have a recommendation for readers in exams. We are using them as part of a package of support with other solutions and other assistive technology to provide additional support and build confidence."

- Keith Houghton, Head of Student Support Services, University of Law

"When it came to exams, students would require a human reader. We had a massive issue with students going out on placements in the workplace where they weren't able to read text that was put in front of them, so we had to come up with a more practical solution, and that's when we came across Scanning Pens' Exam Reader 2™.

We brought them on to try them and see how we got on. We picked 5 students and it worked really well. After that, we went from 5 to 40 to 120 students to I think over 200 today. While our driving force was increasing student independence, there have been other tangible benefits too. Logistically speaking, organising exams has become much easier as fewer rooms are required. We no longer need to train staff as readers and when we introduced it for all first years it saved us approximately 7000 EUR for one semester for one year. The training is good too because it only takes around 20 minutes. If somehow a student is unsure after the training, they are allowed to take the pen away with them and practice and use it on one of their sample papers that they've already had from their course.

For us, the improvements in the pens have made is a big difference and it just keeps improving every update. The users specifically love that the pen can be changed for left or right-handed people and instead of having one invigilator/assistant for each student, we now save time and money by having Exam Reader 2™ that perform that same role."

- Thomas Oshaugnessy, Assistive Technology Officer, University of Limerick

Use of Technology

SENCo's may wish to consider the use of technology to a much greater extent instead of readers and scribes. Computer readers, examination reading pens, speech recognition technology and word processors not only allow candidates to work independently but are also a better preparation for Further and Higher Education and the world of employment.

Cambridge International Exam Board

A reading pen is a Group 1 Access Arrangement, which is centre delegated (2022). See Cambridge Assessment International Education for more information.

Scottish Qualifications Authority (SQA)

Under current SQA guidance, a centre would need to submit a request to SQA for a candidate to be allowed to use a C-Pen Exam Reader 2[™] (this is a pen without a dictionary storage) in an external examination.

International Baccalaureate (IB)

The C-Pen Reader 2^{TM} is a recognised support. You would need to apply to IB with evidence of need for authorisation.

Universities lead the way in the provision of learning support. By providing The C-Pen Exam Reader 2™, students are not only assisted in their examinations but can also achieve independence when researching and assimilating large amounts of text. This is a centre delegated support that can enhance the learning experience for students with literacy difficulties, confidence and well-being issues, and provides support for tired eyes.
